JUNE 2014

This guide intends to provide introductory legal information about Maryland State laws impacting LGBTQ survivors of intimate partner violence and their families. Many LGBTQ people and their families have experienced discrimination, mistreatment and violence within the legal system or when seeking legal remedies. Based on these experiences, LGBTQ survivors often feel apprehension, mistrust, or even fear when interacting with law enforcement or the court system. These challenges, combined with a constantly shifting legal landscape for LGBTQ families and communities, require ongoing education and critical analysis among advocates in order to provide the most effective legal advocacy.

Laws impacting LGBTQ communities change frequently. In the back of this guide, you will find resources for additional information and up to date changes in this evolving area of the law.

Tips for Advocates

Asking questions is one way that advocates can help clarify a survivor's legal questions and concerns. It can also help us direct survivors to the most relevant information, resources, and referrals. Staying mindful of the language we use is an important aspect of our advocacy skill-set when we ask questions about a survivor's relationships, values, and choices, and this is particularly true for LGBTQ survivors. Many LGBTQ people feel sensitive to being treated differently, or subjected to additional scrutiny than heterosexual survivors, so it will be helpful to clarify why we are asking these questions during the interview or assessment process. The way we frame our questions and convey information often impacts how a survivor experiences our advocacy efforts. Before asking questions, it can be helpful to explain why we are asking – as advocates, we are hoping to help identify the best information and resources and increase their self-determination. Sample advocacy questions are provided throughout this document as a jumping off point to support you in gathering information in a culturally meaningful and sensitive manner.

Gathering Documents

Gathering documentation is helpful to any legal process, including filing for a protection order, beginning the process of dissolution, making a parenting plan, or making a discrimination-related complaint. Gathering documentation is also a good way for anyone to prepare for visiting a legal clinic, meeting with an attorney, or safety planning to leave an abusive relationship.

Relevant documents may include:

- Certificates of marriage, domestic partnership, or civil union
- Legal documents established in a relationship (advanced directives, power of attorney, wills, etc.)
- Birth certificate(s) of child(ren), adoption paperwork, etc.
- Police reports, protection orders, etc.
- Court orders
- Relevant medical records
- Photos
- Journals detailing abuse or relationship changes
- Bills, bank statements, etc.

Relationship Status

The availability of legal protection from domestic violence in Maryland is not limited to married couples or couples that have some other form of legally recognized relationship status. Nevertheless, whether a person is in a legally recognized relationship with their alleged abuser is relevant to many issues in the context of intimate partner violence.

In Maryland, as of January 1, 2013, marriage is gender-neutral: both opposite-sex and same-sex couples can marry, and there is no legal distinction between opposite-sex and same-sex marriages. Because the gender of the spouses is now irrelevant to the validity of a marriage in Maryland, the marriages of transgender persons are also legally valid, regardless of either spouse's gender identity or sex assigned at birth.

Dissolution

People must go to court to legally dissolve a marriage. In Maryland, there are seven grounds for the dissolution of a marriage, including a one-year separation, desertion, adultery, cruelty of treatment, and excessively vicious conduct.¹ Maryland will dissolve both same-sex marriages entered into in Maryland and same-sex marriage entered into in another state, so long as the marriage is valid in the state where it was contracted. Other states may not allow same-sex couples to dissolve marriages performed in Maryland; be cognizant of this issue if you are planning to move out of state.

State-to-State Recognition

If a same-sex couple is legally married in another state or country, Maryland will recognize their marriage.

However, if a same-sex couple married in Maryland travels to another state or a foreign country, that state or country might or might not recognize the validity of their marriage. As of this writing, there are eighteen U.S. states, in addition to Maryland, that recognize marriage between same-sex couples as legally valid: California, Connecticut, Delaware, Hawaii, Illinois, Iowa, Maine, Massachusetts, Minnesota, New Hampshire, New Jersey, New Mexico, New York, Oregon, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, Vermont, and Washington, as well as the District of Columbia.

Similarly, if a couple in which one or both members are transgender marries in Maryland and then the spouses travel to another state that does not recognize marriage equality for same-sex couples, it is possible that the other state may not recognize the validity of their marriage. In addition, if a couple in which one or both members are transgender was married in Maryland before January 1, 2013 or was married in a state that does not recognize marriage equality for same-sex couples, the validity of their marriage could be open to subsequent dispute if, at the time that they were married, the legally recognized genders of the spouses were the same. If a person or couple has concerns about whether a marriage will be recognized as valid, they may want to consult with an attorney regarding their particular situation.

Other Legal Relationships

Before Maryland updated its marriage laws to include same-sex couples, Maryland made a limited form of legal relationship recognition available to both same-sex and opposite-sex couples called “domestic partnership.” Domestic partnerships can still be established in Maryland, but the rights that a domestic partnership creates are very limited in comparison to marriage: they generally involve rights related to hospital visitation and medical caregiving,² decisionmaking authority regarding burial and other postmortem arrangements for a deceased partner,³ greater access to health insurance coverage in some cases,⁴ and access to some spousal tax benefits.⁵

Other states and jurisdictions have created other forms of legal recognition for same-sex couples, sometimes called “domestic partnerships,” “reciprocal beneficiary relationships,” or “civil unions.” The rights that these relationships create vary from state to state, from very limited sets of rights all the way to virtually all of the rights and responsibilities of marriage except for the title “marriage.” It is not yet clear what legal effect Maryland courts are required to give to non-marital legal relationships established in other states.

ADVOCACY QUESTIONS

- Are you currently in a legally recognized relationship with your partner?
- Do you have any questions or concerns about the legality of your marriage?
- Have you entered into any type of legally recognized relationship in the past (domestic partnership, civil union, marriage) in Maryland or in another state or country?
- Have you created any other types of legal paperwork with your partner (e.g. advance directives, wills, power of attorney, parenting documents)?
- Are you contemplating moving out of state?

Parenting & Child Custody

When LGBTQ couples parent children together, it is important to determine whether both partners/spouses are legally recognized as parents. In Maryland, there are a number of ways to become legal parents of a child. Generally, a person who gives birth to a child is considered the child's legal parent, unless the person is acting as a surrogate, relinquishes parental rights through adoption, or has their parental rights terminated by the state.

Establishing Parental Rights

When a married couple has a child, the law presumes that the spouses are the parents of the child. Although this has not yet been tested in Maryland, that presumption should apply in same-sex marriages, even though one partner may not be biologically related to the child.

If a couple is not married, the non-biological parent can establish legal parentage through second parent adoption of a partner's biological child by the non-biological partner.⁶ Although not specifically authorized by law in Maryland, most jurisdictions permit same-sex second parent adoptions under the same legal standards governing stepparent adoptions. Even married same-sex partners may want to complete a second-parent adoption, however, because states that do not recognize same-sex marriage may also fail to recognize parental status that comes as a result of the marriage. The second parent adoption decree, however, is a court judgment that must be recognized in every state. If you are planning interstate travel in places that do not recognize same-sex marriage, a second-parent adoption provides protection in the event that your relationship to your child is questioned.

If a person is not legally recognized as a parent of his or her partner's child, the person generally will not be eligible to seek custody of or visitation with the child unless he or she demonstrates that his or her partner is an unfit parent or that there are other "exceptional circumstances" such that denying child custody or visitation to the person would have a negative impact on the child. Unlike some other states, Maryland does not recognize the concept of "de facto" parenthood.⁷

⁶ See generally MD. CODE ANN. FAM. LAW §§ 5-3b-01 et seq. (independent adoption).

⁷ See Janice M. v. Margaret K., 404 Md. 661 (2008).

Establishing Custody

Maryland courts use the “best interests of the child” standard to determine which parent should be awarded custody if child custody is disputed. The court is required to consider a number of factors, including the fitness of the parents, the character and reputation of the parties, the desire of the child, the child’s age, health and sex, material opportunities affecting the child’s welfare, and the potential for maintaining natural family relations. Under Maryland law, a parent’s sexual orientation, standing alone, is not a valid reason to deny the parent custody.⁸ There is no court decision specifically holding that a person’s gender identity is not a valid consideration in deciding which parent will have custody of a child. Although Maryland’s public policy increasingly opposes discrimination on the basis of gender identity, many transgender persons may find themselves at a disadvantage in child custody disputes, especially if they are going through the process of gender transition at the time that custody is being disputed. Some judges may view a parent’s gender transition as evidence of a lack of stability, or may view exposure to a parent’s process of transition as potentially damaging to a child’s development. In addition, some judges may view the medical expenses associated with gender transition as illegitimate, placing a transgender parent at a disadvantage in determination of child support or alimony.

A court must consider evidence of intimate partner abuse in making a custody determination; if the court finds that a parent has committed an act of abuse, the court must make custody and visitation arrangements that best protect the abused parent and child.⁹

- Do you and your partner have children?
- Do you have a legally established relationship to your children?
- Are you a biological parent?
- Were you in a registered domestic partnership or married when your children were born?
- How long have you lived with your children?
- Have you engaged in a formal adoption process?
- Are you interested in options to legally recognize your relationship with your children if you have not already done so?
- Does anyone else have legal rights to your children?

⁸ See Boswell v. Boswell, 721 A.2d 662 (Md. 1998).

Peace & Protection Orders

LGBTQ survivors have the same legal rights to protection as heterosexual survivors and may file for a peace or protective order (also known as a restraining order or ex parte). Survivors may request a civil protective or peace order—which is not a criminal case—to request a range of protections and benefits such as access to housing and vehicles, financial support, and child custody and visitation, that can open new doors for survivors. Many survivors choose to seek relief and justice through the courts when other strategies are less effective or when they are ready to leave the relationship. Despite the potential benefits, using and cooperating with the criminal justice system to address abuse is emotionally challenging for many victims. Survivors should safety plan if they believe that taking action through the courts will cause their partner to escalate the abuse and increase the survivor’s danger.

In Maryland, LGBTQ survivors are eligible for protective and peace orders, depending upon the relationship the survivor has with their partner. Protective orders are available to same-sex partners who are married, share a child in common, or have lived together for 90 days over the past year.¹⁰ Those who are not related to their abusers in one of those ways (i.e., those in dating relationships) can petition for a peace order.¹¹ As of October 1, 2014, protective and peace orders both require that the petitioner prove that abuse (serious bodily harm, fear of imminent serious bodily harm, assault, sexual assault, false imprisonment, stalking) has occurred by the standard of the “preponderance of the evidence,” which means that they must prove that it is more likely than not that the abuse occurred.¹² In a peace order case, the petitioner must show not only that an act of abuse has occurred within the past 30 days, but that a prohibited act is likely to happen again.¹³ Protective orders can last for up to one year and provide a variety of forms of relief, including protection from further abuse; stay away orders from a person, home, school, or workplace; custody and visitation of children; use and possession of a family home or vehicle; emergency financial assistance; and removal of firearms.¹⁴ Peace orders last for up to six months with a possibility of a six month extension and provide more limited relief.^{15, 16}

See Appendix B for a flow chart of Peace and Protective Order processes.

¹⁰ MD. CODE ANN. FAM. LAW § 4-501

¹¹ MD. CODE ANN. CTS. & JUD. PROC. § 3-1503

¹² Until October 1, 2014, abuse must be proved by the “clear and convincing evidence” standard, which requires that abuse be proven to a higher degree of certainty. In practice, judges applying the “clear and convincing evidence” standard have often required documentation of injuries, or eyewitness testimony from someone other than the survivor of abuse, in order to grant a protective order or peace order. In 2014, the Maryland legislature enacted 2014 Md. Laws ch. 112, changing the standard of proof from “clear and convincing evidence” to the “preponderance of the evidence,” effective as of October 1, 2014.

¹⁵ MD. CODE ANN. CTS. & JUD. PROC. § 3-1506

¹⁶ MD. CODE ANN. CTS. & JUD. PROC. §§ 3-1505 & 3-1506

It is not uncommon for abusive partners or spouses to file their own petitions for protective and peace orders with the court. This can make it more challenging for the survivor to file a petition. This is why it can be important for a survivor to be at the final peace or protective order hearing, so they can provide evidence and testimony to show that they are the victim. If the abusive partner has an order against the victim, it can also enable an abusive partner to isolate a survivor and prevent that survivor from accessing community services and spaces. To combat this isolation, see the Northwest Network's toolkit, It Takes a Village, People (available at nwnetwork.org).

ADVOCACY QUESTIONS

- Have you ever filed for a civil order of protection or peace order against your partner or spouse?
- Have you ever been the respondent of a civil order of protection or peace order (has your partner or spouse ever filed a protective order or peace order against you)?

Criminal Charges & Arrests

Many forms of domestic violence, such as assault, sexual assault, stalking, harassment, or malicious destruction of property, are criminal. Survivors or a bystander may call the police if a victim is in imminent danger, which can be lifesaving and may result in the arrest of an abusive partner. Not all police responses will result in an arrest or in criminal charges being filed. If a survivor wishes to initiate criminal charges against their partner on their own if the police do not file charges on their behalf, they may do so by going to the District Court commissioner's office.

Calling the police can also be a risk for survivors. LGBTQ survivors may face disbelief, harassment, and abuse by police and are much more likely to be arrested by police. Police and courts often mistakenly believe that violence in same-sex relationships is "mutual" or "equal." Advocates should note that an inappropriate response from police in the past may be a barrier to a survivor calling the police in the future.

Studies show that police are up to 30 times more likely to arrest both parties when responding to domestic violence incidents involving same-sex couples (see Hirschel et al., USDOJ, 2007 at <https://ncjrs.gov/pdffiles1/nij/grants/218355.pdf>). A criminal charge can have significant consequences for child custody, access to housing, employment, and other issues. See the tip card in Appendix C for some talking points to use with survivors so they know their rights if they are arrested. If a survivor is arrested, they may contact the Office of the Public Defender or a private attorney to obtain legal representation.

ADVOCACY QUESTIONS

- Has your partner or spouse ever been arrested or convicted of a domestic violence-related crime, such as assault?
- Have you ever been arrested or convicted of a domestic violence-related crime, such as assault?

Housing & Property

In Maryland, a tenant who has been subjected to domestic violence or sexual assault has the right to terminate their lease by providing the landlord with 30 day written notice¹⁷ of their intent to vacate the property and a copy of the tenant's protective or peace order.¹⁸ After the notice is given, the tenant is only responsible for those 30 days of rent.¹⁹

If a survivor would like to remain in their rental unit but feels unsafe, the tenant may request that the landlord change the locks. The request must be in writing and a copy of the protective or peace order must be submitted. Once the landlord receives the request, the locks must be changed by close of the next business day.²⁰ If the landlord is not able to change the locks within that time period, the tenant may have the locks changed by a certified locksmith.²¹ The tenant is responsible for any reasonable fees associated with have the locks changed.²²

- Do you have property in common with your partner or spouse?
- Are you on a shared lease or rental agreement with your partner or spouse?
- Has your partner or spouse acquired debt during your relationship?
- Have you tried to end your lease early or have your landlord change your locks?
- Has your landlord tried to evict you?

Immigration

Since the Supreme Court's decision in *United States v. Windsor*²³, the federal government may no longer discriminate against same-sex couples in the conferral of federal benefits, including federal immigration benefits. Legally married LGBTQ couples should be treated the same as legally married heterosexual couples for the purposes of federal immigration law.

U-Visa and VAWA Self-Petitions

Undocumented LGBTQ survivors may be eligible for a U-Visa to establish legal residency if they have been the victim of a crime, suffered substantial physical or mental abuse as a result of being a victim of the crime, have information about the criminal activity, and are helpful in the criminal investigation or prosecution.²⁴ Undocumented LGBTQ survivors who are in legal marriages to United States citizens or lawful permanent residents should be able to file a VAWA self-petition to establish legal residency if they are abused by their spouses.²⁵ Survivors and advocates with immigration questions should consult an attorney, if possible. See the Legal Resources in Appendix A for options.

Secure Communities²⁶

The federal program Secure Communities was designed as a partnership between federal and local law enforcement to detain and remove undocumented individuals convicted of serious crimes. However, Immigration and Customs Enforcement (ICE) agents often ask local jails to hold all immigrants for deportation without regards to conviction. Often, small infractions such as a traffic violation have been used to hold immigrants in jail until ICE can deport them. The Secure Communities program has weakened relationships between immigrant communities and law enforcement. Many immigrants fear reporting crimes or coming forward as witnesses because of possible deportation or getting a family member deported. Currently, only the Frederick County Sheriff's Office participates formally in the Secure Communities program. However, the extent to which local law enforcement agencies cooperates with these requests varies from jurisdiction to jurisdiction.

These agreements allow state and local law enforcement to perform immigration law enforcement functions. The federal program Secure Communities is also known as 287(g) Agreements.

When assisting immigrant survivors, it is important to consider the fear of law enforcement and deportation. Immigrant survivors may be concerned that they and/or their partner will be deported. Deportation is often used as a threat by an abuser. The abuser may also provide the survivor with a wealth of misinformation regarding the legal system and use language, literacy, and isolation against the survivor. The survivor may also have a fear of police from their home country and may not be familiar with their rights and law enforcement practices in the U.S. Finally, an immigrant survivor may have heard or known of other immigrants in their community that faced removal proceedings after seeking help from police. Advocates should become familiar with the practices and policies of their local law enforcement agencies and correct any misinformation that the survivor may have received about the criminal justice system so they can make an informed decision when considering criminal justice involvement.

ADVOCACY QUESTIONS

- Do you have any immigration related concerns regarding your relationship?
- Are you in a legally recognized relationship with a U.S. citizen or a legal permanent resident? (e.g. marriage, domestic partnership)?
- Are you interested in learning more about your options to file for a special visa to stay in the U.S. based on your experience as a survivor?
- Did you experience violence in your home country due to your gender identity or sexual orientation?

Note: U-visas generally require a survivor to provide information to authorities related to a criminal case.

NEXT STEPS IN ADVOCACY

Community-based advocates play an important role in supporting LGBTQ survivors of intimate partner violence who may be navigating the legal system. Advocates can offer support and information while being mindful to communicate the boundaries of our position.

Connecting Survivors to Resources

One of the most important tools advocates have is the ability to provide systems advocacy: We can share information with survivors and support them to understand how complex legal systems work, how to be prepared for court or meeting with an attorney, what documentation to gather, and more.

Many people assume they will be able to find a pro bono attorney who specializes in DV or LGBTQ issues, which may not be the case in many communities. Therefore, an advocate can also help clarify what resources may or may not be available in our service area. It is important to stay up to date about the resources available in your area, and to be realistic with survivors about what is available so that they can manage their expectations. Access to legal services and representation is a significant barrier for many survivors, particularly LGBTQ survivors who lack financial resources or who live in more rural areas.

Regardless of whether you see LGBTQ survivors once a day or once a year, it is important to continue to update advocacy referral lists, build and sustain relationships with attorneys and low-cost legal aid organizations, and stay connected to best practices in legal advocacy for LGBTQ survivors. You'll find helpful resources and information on the next pages to get you started!

Employment Law Hotline (ELH) (Statewide)

Volunteer attorneys answer questions about workplace rights such as discrimination in hiring, firing, promotions or other working conditions, discrimination based on pregnancy, sexual harassment, family or medical leave issues, unpaid wages, contract issues and more. The ELH may be reached at 1-877-422-9500

Family Law Hotline (Statewide)

The Hotline is a free service to people with basic family law questions such as "What the grounds are for divorce?" or "If I leave with the kids, can I still get child support?" The hotline is staffed by attorneys experienced in family law, and is operated in partnership with the Legal Aid Bureau, Inc. The Hotline operates at 1-800-845-8550.

Legal Forms Helpline (Statewide)

The Helpline is a free telephone service for people who are able to file their family law cases pro se, because their cases are uncomplicated and uncontested. Attorneys help callers understand the process or completing form pleadings. The Helpline operates at 1-800-818-9888. A Spanish-speaking attorney is available by calling 1-877-293-2507. Leave a message and an attorney will return your call. (Spanish only)

Protection Order Advocacy and Representation Project (Baltimore City, Baltimore County, and Carroll County)

The Protection Order Advocacy and Representation Project represents victims of domestic violence at protection order hearings in Baltimore City, Baltimore County, and Carroll County Circuit Courts. The Project's attorneys represent people who have been abused by an intimate partner (current or past boyfriend/girlfriend, current or ex spouse) in proceedings to obtain protection orders, enforce protection orders through contempt, and modify existing protection orders. The project is open Monday through Friday and there is no charge. For more information, call 410-783-0377 in Baltimore City, 410-887-3162 in Baltimore County, and 410-386-2440 in Carroll County.

The Multi-Ethnic Domestic Violence Project (MEDOVI) (Baltimore City)

MEDOVI offers assistance and legal representation to address the special needs of foreign-born victims of domestic violence in Maryland. Using provisions under the Violence Against Women Act [VAWA], MEDOVI staff work with people who have been abused by a spouse or intimate partner. MEDOVI services are confidential and can help you to attain legal immigration status without having to rely on the support of your abuser. For more information about the program, call 410-396-3294.

Judicare (Baltimore County)

Each year, the WLC screens cases and places 40 low-income clients involved in contested custody cases in Baltimore County with experienced attorneys who provide their services for free to clients. The attorneys involved in this project agree to be paid a significantly reduced fee by the WLC to represent clients and continue their service for the duration of the case, even if the payment cap is exceeded. For more information about this project, call 410-321-8761.

Public Justice Center

Areas of legal assistance:

Human Right to Housing: protects and expands tenants' rights to safe, habitable, affordable, and non-discriminatory housing and to fair and equal treatment by Maryland's landlord-tenant laws, courts and agencies. Current actions in this project focus on two distinct groups of low-income tenants: those who face eviction in Baltimore City's rent court and those who face eviction because their landlord is in foreclosure.

Workplace Justice: works primarily with low-wage workers to enforce and expand their right to an honest day's pay for an honest day's work. We use a variety of strategies including: legislative, regulatory and other policy advocacy, litigation, and coalition development.

Education Stability: advocates to ensure that students who are highly mobile, including those who are homeless and in foster care, have the opportunity to remain and succeed in school.

Health and Benefits: seeks to protect and expand Medicaid and other public benefits that support people living in poverty. The project uses the range of legal strategies in its advocacy, including advocating before the state agencies that implement health and benefit programs, the legislators who set the law and budget, and the courts who enforce the law.

Immigrants' Rights: seeks to protect and expand the rights of low-wage and poverty-stricken immigrants in Maryland. Handles cases related to: wage theft, consumer law issues, housing abuses and want to ensure that immigrants have access to state courts, programs and agencies.
