"A client's abuser denied her access to her children for months. When she was finally able to visit, she noticed bruises and burns on them. Before she left, her abuser assaulted her. She reported the incident and at an emergency custody hearing was held. We represented the victim and proposed that she enter shelter and receive counseling for herself and her children. We let her know we could help her apply for medical assistance, employment, and housing. The court accepted this plan and she was reunited with her children that night."
